

Two thirds (66%)

of GP trainees are supportive of maintaining the option of independent contractor status

However, they are less likely to be supportive than qualified GPs. This is due to GP trainees being more likely to be unsure of their views than increased numbers proactively disagreeing with the option.

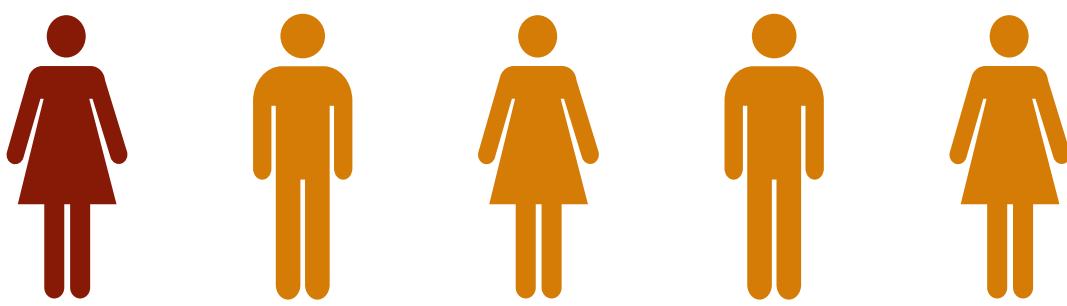

Two thirds (66%)

of GP trainees – a higher than average figure - rank insufficient time with each patient among the top four factors that most negatively impact on their personal commitment to general practice

Around one in ten

(8%) Qualified GPs feel that the standard ten minute consultation is adequate

Around one in five (19%)

GP trainees – the youngest cohort in the profession – are considering working abroad before 2020

Just over one-third of GP trainees hope to move to part-time working in the next five years
